

Upland librarians have answer for everything

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Where — in the city of Upland — can a steak-and-potatoes cook go to get the lowdown on roasting a whole pig?

Or a man recently from Bangladesh find a Bengali-English dictionary to help him learn to talk with his new neighbors?

And where could a local company go when their roof collapses under winter rains, and important files are reduced into a sodden mess?

These are just some of the wide range of people reference librarians at Upland Public Library have helped successfully since January.

"People are aware they can get a good novel to read at their local library," said Linda Yao, library director. "But they often don't know about the every-day bits of information we can help them with."

"There are lots of little problems we can help solve, with basic, down-to-earth information."

She said many local residents visit the library before a scheduled surgery to learn exactly what the doctors will be doing, or will pick up a how-to book on repairing a car or the house plumbing.

Supervising Librarian Patricia Castaneda said she has had several people in lately to find out the technique used to manufacture gas-ohol in an effort to beat the gas crunch.

"One man wanted to make it from grass," she recalled, "and he knew the whole procedure but had to find out the sugar content of the grass."

"We referred him to a grass expert at the University of California, Irvine."

The librarians may find the answer to off-the-wall questions in the building's 89,000 books, but they also have access to resources all over Southern California — and beyond.

Queries can often be answered in a matter of minutes, or just a few days if the information has to be sent from another member of the Inland Library System.

In some cases when the answer involves detailed research, library employees may spend weeks of time to find the solution.

"It would be incredibly expensive to hire a researcher for something like this," said Castaneda, "even if a college student did it."

And of course, there is no charge to the patron for the library services.

Library volunteers have also put together a 66-page publication listing social and service organizations dealing with everything from alcoholism to welfare. The pamphlet is available for the asking.

Castaneda and Reference Librarian Micca Gray said they help dozens of job seekers impress potential employers by learning the company's background before an interview, and have helped "say it with flowers" by looking up the symbolic meaning of certain blossoms.

The service is available to groups as well as individuals, and the Upland Police Department had librarians draw up a bibliography and references on providing psychological support for crime victims.

Some of the requests are a little tougher to understand, like the man who needed to know the sulfur content of the moon, or the writer who wanted to learn the characteristics of mules — without traipsing about in rural fields to do the research.

"Sometimes people are really anxious to tell you the whole scenario surrounding their question," said Castaneda. "Those are the ones we can help the most."

"Others, like people hunting for lost gold mines or something, are more secretive, and it's harder to find out exactly what they need."

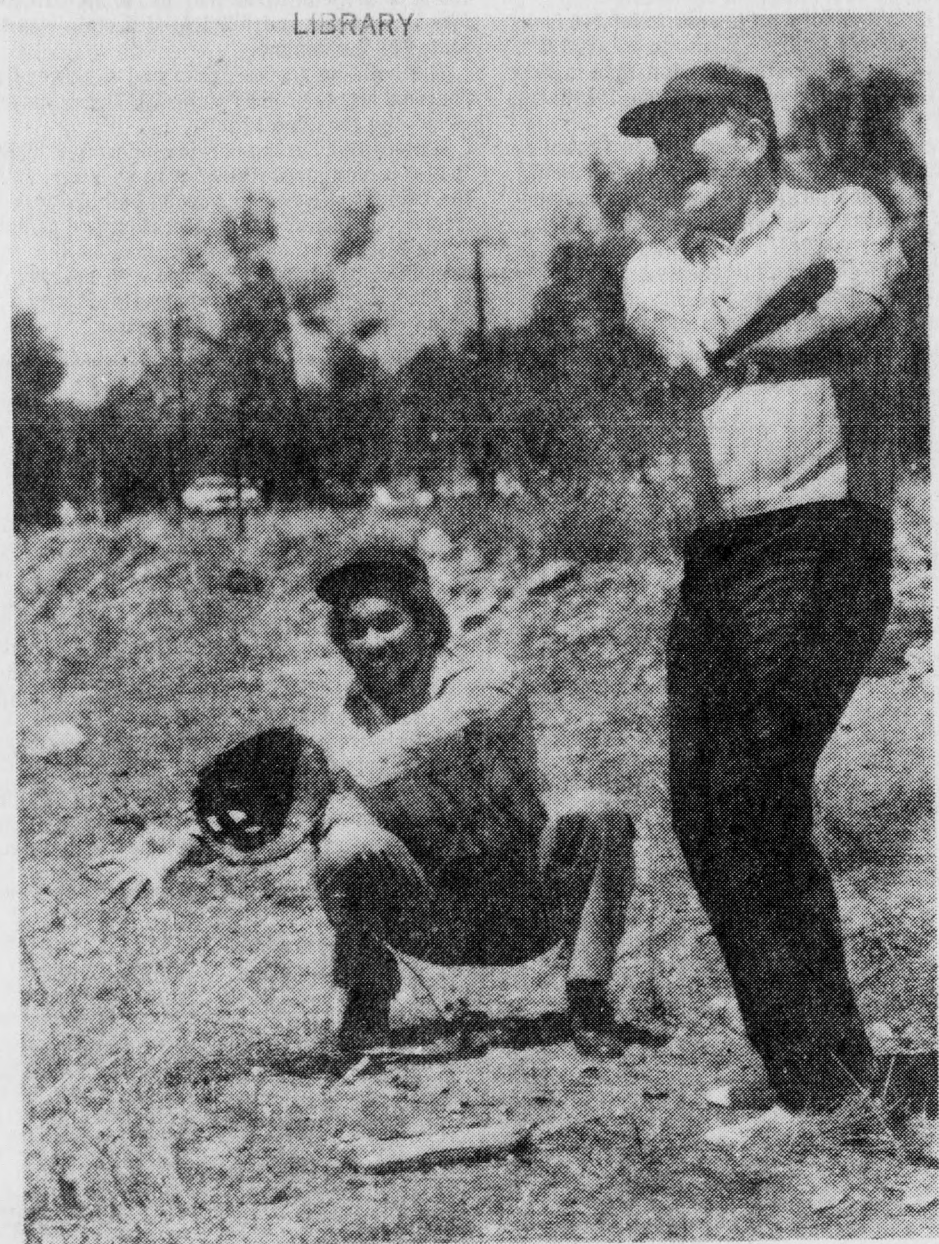

The librarians enjoy their job, and occasionally answer calls above and beyond the call of duty.

One local reviewer recalls the time she fell asleep during the last act of a play, then was horrified to realize she didn't know how it ended.

A quick call to the library saved her neck and reputation — as patient librarians read the final act to her over the phone.

By the way, the advice to that local company inundated with last January's rain was to quickly freeze the water-logged papers, and take them to a firm with a vacuum chamber to dry the contents slowly.

Council gives mayor a raise

Members of the Upland City Council agreed unanimously Monday to give the mayor a $100-per-month raise, upping the salary for the part-time position from $200 to $300.

Councilman Frank Carpenter made the motion, citing the long hours that Mayor John McCarthy and his predecessors have devoted to the position.

"They (mayors) receive the same salary as the rest of the council, yet may spend half of every day and long hours at meetings," said Carpenter.

The motion passed 3-0.

Upland family found GOP convention 'exciting'

By LINDA BERGSTEDT

If the Republican National Convention might have seemed dull to TV viewers, the Jack Pierce family of Upland found it exciting to be there.

Two generations of the Upland family were on the convention floor to hear fellow-Californian Gov. Ronald Reagan give his acceptance speech as the party's presidential nominee.

Jack and Nina Pierce and their son Peter were not delegates but were "guests" of the convention in Detroit.

"From my standpoint, it was exciting just to be there because of the idea that history was being made. If Reagan becomes president, we were there to hear his acceptance speech," Peter said.

It was the 20-year-old's second national convention as he was a youth delegate to the 1966 GOP conclave, where he made several acquaintances.

When he came home this June from Stanford University, Peter told his parents he was going this year as a "guest."

"I decided right then that I'd better go, too," said Mrs. Pierce, who has been a "Reagan fan for years."

She knew that applications for alternate status must be made in advance but also knew about the "guest" status at convention as she has long been active in Republican politics. Current president of the Chaffey Community Republican Women, Federated, Mrs. Pierce served on the state board of GOP Women in 1972-73.

The "guest" status was created so that spouses of delegates and alternates could attend conventions.

"There are 'guests' that are asked to go because they are large contributors (financially) or because of their highranking offices in the party," Mrs. Pierce said. Some guests are active in the party.

Once she obtained "guest" status credentials for herself, Mrs. Pierce arranged for the same thing for her husband, Jack.

They flew out of San Francisco with the California delegation and arrived in Detroit, where the group was met at the airport by members of the GOP host committee and taken by private cars to their hotels.

Once at the convention, "the thing up for grabs was getting into the sessions," Mrs. Pierce noted. She commended the "nice set up" of the convention and said she and Jack obtained the right credentials so they could attend all of the sessions.

"Because we were registered as part of the California delegation it meant being included in all of the social events too," Mrs. Pierce said with a big smile.

In the meantime, Peter left California by train, traveling with the 200 youth delegates from this state. The young people stayed in dorms at Eastern Michigan University in Ypsilanti, Mich., about an hour's bus drive outside of Detroit.

The nearly 2,000 young people held rallies and caucuses and heard prominent Republicans as speakers and panelists when they converged on Ford Auditorium down the street from the Renaissance Center, where the main convention was being held.

Peter also was involved in the main convention as one of the volunteers in charge of floor demonstrations. He was "briefed on cheers" and he and other youths made about 10,000 signs to supplement the printed ones and also made banners.

While on the convention floor, Peter was among those cuing the chants and yells for the demonstrations.

"I also was lucky enough to be an Surrounded by memorabilia from the Republican National Convention, Nina Pierce and her son Peter recall some of the highlights of the conclave in Detroit. Mrs. Pierce, her husband, Jack, and Peter all attended the convention as "guests" not as delegates. advance man backstage so I got to meet the perhaps next vice president (George Bush) as he drove up," Peter recalled.

When they weren't attending convention sessions, Nina and Jack Pierce were caught up in the social whirl arranged by the Republican Host Committee — the tours, the luncheons, the cocktail parties and dinners.

During their first evening in Detroit, the Uplanders joined the party at Stroh's Brewery. Also during that weekend before the convention officially opened, there was a "parade of boats — private yachts for everyone who wanted to go," Mrs. Pierce said. "They had hors d'oeuvres and cocktails out on the water, then we had dinner at the yacht club."

Monday there was a party for all guests from all of the states at Cobo Hall, where about 60 prominent Detroit restaurants set up booths with samples of their best cuisine.

About 1,500 women attended a mid-week luncheon given by the Federated Republican Women, where special guests were Nancy Reagan and Betty Ford.

"We went to W. Clement Stone's party on his yacht," Mrs. Pierce recalled. "This was the California party given by Sen. (S.I.) Hayakawa and Margaret Brock."

Mrs. Pierce was amazed at the crowds gathered outside of the convention and noted that no one could get past the lobby without credentials.

"People were standing behind the ropes, waiting night and day because everyone at the convention had to come in that way," she said. Those without credentials were just waiting for a glimpse of a Reagan, Ford or Kissinger.

The Pierces were somewhat surprised to learn about the controversy over President Gerald Ford's possible consideration as vice president. "We knew Reagan was considering Ford," Mrs. Pierce said, and "later, we did hear that it wasn't decided."

"Then all of a sudden, delegates were talking about Ford which surprised me because I don't think the delegates really were inclined that way."

The Pierces feel that George Bush really ended up as a compromise, but agreed that he adds a foreign policy expertise to the ticket.

"The conservatives took the platform so they had to do something for the moderate wing of the party," Peter said.

"Had they not had the platform so severe, we might have had Jack Kemp," Mrs. Pierce said.

How do they feel about the results of the Republican Convention?

"We think it looks so good we can hardly believe it!" exclaimed Mrs. Pierce. "Reagan is very representative and meritorious of the presidency."

"I think he understands it and feels it is a crusade ... he is such a catalyst that all of our candidates will have a better chance because of him."

"This time I was really proud of the party," Peter said. "I thought Reagan gave a great acceptance speech and didn't come off as too conservative."

"I'm as encouraged about being a Republican as I've ever been," said the young man, who has been involved in political campaigns since he was 12. He was president of the state high school Young Republican organization in 1976-77 and, since returning from the national convention, he has been taking tests and going to seminars in Los Angeles in hopes of being accepted as a paid member of Reagan's staff.

Jobless rate rises 0.7% in 2-county area in June

The unadjusted unemployment rate in the Riverside-San Bernardino counties area rose from 7.6 percent in May to 8.3 percent in June, the state Employment Development Department announced today.

The rate a year ago in June was 6.4 percent. Unemployment in the two-county area increased in June to 48,900 from 44,100 in May. The June jobless total compares with 36,600 estimated for June 1979.

Total civilian employment rose in June to 540,500 from 538,100 in May. The June figure a year ago was 533,000. The total civilian labor force increased in June to 589,400 from 582,200 in May. The estimated June 1979 labor force was 569,600.

Total wage and salary employment in the two counties increased by 3,300 between May and June to 467,200. A major increase in agricultural jobs more than compensated for losses in most of the other categories.

Farm employment recorded a sizable increase from 5,800 jobs to 22,900. Most of the increase was due to the vineyard and cantaloupe harvests.

In the government category, which includes federal, state, county, city and education employees, public payrolls decreased by 1,200 to 102,200. A minor seasonal increase of 300 jobs in the federal sector did not match a drop of 1,500 in state and local governments. The latter reflected major cutbacks in educational facilities at the close of the school term.

In manufacturing, factory employment decreased by 700 to 66,300, compared with 67,100 a year ago. A 600-job loss in primary and fabricated metals was the biggest factor in the decline.

The building trades group had a slower-than-normal seasonal increase of 200 to 29,900. This is the exact figure estimated for June 1979.

Employment in the service industries declined by 800 to 91,600, compared with 87,000 a year ago. The EDD said the decline was due to seasonal cutbacks in hotels and motels, amusement and recreation and private schools.

The estimated number of jobs in the trade group remained at 108,200, compared with 103,200 in June 1979. In June, a 100-job gain in wholesale activity was negated by an equal loss in the retail sector.

Former Milwaukee Bucks basketball player Oscar Robertson, left, is welcomed to the University of La Verne board of trustees by Dr. Armen Sarafin, university president, at a luncheon in Claremont.

Basketball player a La Verne trustee

Oscar Robertson, former Milwaukee Bucks basketball player, has been elected to the board of trustees at the University of La Verne.

A resident of Cincinnati, Robertson now owns and operates a construction company, the Oscar Robertson Co., located in Cincinnati.

"I think that a lot of the publicity that's geared around the country contributes to bigness. I think people fail to realize the works that the small colleges do for America — and for the world as a matter of fact," said Robertson about joining ULV's board. "We often forget this because we are so involved in bigness today in America that we often forget small people, small university systems and small colleges. And there is a tremendous number of kids who do not like the bigness."

Robertson, who attended the University of Cincinnati for his undergraduate work in business administration, cited the large classes of 100 or more.

"Although you're a number at a smaller school, you have fewer numbers to deal with," he said. "I think sometimes personal attention can go a long way as to whether a kid can be successful or not in a given course."

Mom: Beware of danger zones

By LINDA BERGSTEDT
Panorama Editor

"Danger zones" — times when accidents occur due to lagging attention or physical exhaustion — occur in all occupations, even motherhood.

Shirley Radl pinpoints the hotspots in a mother's career as "the first five or six years in her children's lives."

She added, "Preschool children require more care, create more confusion and make more demands than children at any other age. The constant one-on-one, mother-to-child exposure, lays the groundwork for maternal stress."

"Mother's Day Out" has become an institution in the Radl household. Whether she pays a baby sitter, neighbor or baby-sitting cooperative to care for her offspring, mother can find soothing balm to her aching psyche by spending a day in the company of other adults.

Author of "How To Be A Mother and A Person Too," Radl brings her expertise on the subject of mothering to the 1980 Kentucky Fried Chicken Time Out Institute. She and fellow institute members will be exploring the motherhood role in the next decade and interpreting results of a national analysis of women's attitudes toward mothering.

Radl said the most trivial of events can signal a danger zone for a mother and suggests Mom know her own limits.

"When you wake up to discover that the milk's gone sour in the fridge, your dog had a midnight accident on the rug and the washing machine won't work, call the kids together and declare a truce. Tell them you're taking the day off from cooking, cleaning and kids. Find a sympathetic neighbor to watch them and go shopping or just stay home and relax ... alone!"

Radl acknowledges that this may sound selfish. "But, what's best for Mom is usually best for the children, too," she advises. "When she's feeling good, she's a more patient, fun-loving mother."

The Palo Alto mother of two children speaks from experience. She laughingly admits to being "the only mother on the block who hasn't been to a shrink." Her balanced outlook on motherhood can be attributed to a supportive husband and outlets that include founding a parental stress hotline and spearheading a grass roots movement titled "Quality of Life for Mothers," dedicated to upgrading the image of mothering in the media.

"Mothering is not easy. It is not a genetically endowed skill. What it takes is the wisdom of Solomon, the patience of Buddha and the love of, you guessed it, a mother," Radl maintains.

Mothering experiences differ with each family unit, but Radl would like to see a "parental coping course" become standard indoctrination for prospective parents.

"No one ever warns parents-to-be about things like noise pollution. A crying baby can send a mother right over the brink, if she thinks it is unnatural to be bothered by wailing." In fact, Radl feels items like disposable diapers have preserved the sanity of more than one young mother.

While she emphasizes with all mothers, Radl has a special feeling for the "supermoms. Pity them all," she said. "They are creating needless anxieties by taking that best-of-all-worlds approach to life. Kids should be enjoyed even if housekeeping suffers. After all, no one ever died from dust balls."

In her research and studies, Radl has found that most child abuse incidents occur at the dinner hour.

"It's no surprise," she asserts. "Dinner time means kids are ornery and hungry, and tension's running high in anticipation of Daddy's arrival." On top of that are the phone calls.

"It's a little known fact," she said, "but just ask any mother, when dinner time arrives, the phone starts ringing. Do we want to buy carpeting, life insurance, get our furniture reupholstered at a 50 percent discount, or contribute to the fund for unhappy mothers?"

Fortunately, Radl sees a simple cure for this problem — "Hang up or take the phone off the hook or develop a special code of rings for your husband and friends to use."

To make the dinner hour less of a pressure cooker, Radl offers the following suggestions:

— Don't Cook. Bring dinner in. Everybody from cook to dishwasher gets a reprieve from chores.

— Start Early. Prepare as much of the meal as possible while children are playing outside or napping.

— Take a Hike. Get the kids out of the house while cooking, either for a walk around the block or have your partner take them for a drive to pick up milk or a newspaper.

— Plan a Picnic: The kids will think eating on paper plates is a real treat. Let them invite some friends over and make it a party.

— Serve Soup. When your timing's off, placate them with soup while the entree is cooking.

"Forewarned is forearmed," Radl concluded. "If we develop a faculty for recognizing impending danger zones, we'll be able to redirect our energies which makes for a happier household."

Every job has its occupational hazards and for mothers, the dinner hour is just one crisis time ... the end of summer vacation and rainy days also are sure bets to raise her tension levels. Author Shirley Radl recommends that Mom drop the children off at a sitter and take "time out" for her own interests.

Two decade fight for political asylum continues

By KEN SWART
Staff Writer

For two decades, Bertil Sagermark has been caught in a web of international intrigue that would rival the imagination of most detective story writers.

But unlike those pulp novels where the hero always wins, it may not be a happy ending for the 61-year-old Sweden native and Escondido resident who is now seeking political asylum in the United States.

After a hearing Thursday in the San Diego office of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Sagermark was asked to re-submit, for perhaps the sixth time, an application for political asylum.

The application must be received no later than Aug. 4 and then a formal hearing will be scheduled soon after that, according to Sagermark. But after six years of seemingly endless hearings and delays, Sagermark may ultimately receive the decision he fears most — an order to leave the United States or be deported.

Although Sagermark claims the Swedish government would forcibly place him in an institution for the criminally insane if he ever returned home, the INS has repeatedly refused to grant Sagermark permanent U.S. residence.

In fact, INS officials say they have no proof to support Sagermark's claim that his life would be in danger if he ever went back to Sweden.

These same officials, however, apparently refuse to accept the fact that Sagermark was himself the catalyst for the so-called "Anti-Sagermark Law" in Sweden — which generally makes it impossible to prosecute a high official for crimes committed during business hours.

"The INS has disregarded due process by preventing me from presenting my information," Sagermark said during a visit to the West End recently. "They've already predetermined my case."

He has written letters to INS officials and U.S. presidents and visited newspapers from Flagstaff to Fontana, desperately seeking support.

As he has done so many times in the past at so many other newspapers, Sagermark recently came to The Daily Report to plead his case.

It is a strange case. Sagermark also admits it is complicated — and his telling of it through a thick German-like accent makes it all the more difficult to understand. Indeed, Sagermark is unsure even if he understands everything that has happened to him these past 20 years.

The story begins in 1961. Sagermark, a highly-respected civil engineer, moves to Spain to negotiate a contract with his firm, a Swedish firm called Lindencranes and a Spanish firm called Ferrovias.

He hopes to persuade Ferrovias to build cranes designed by Lindencranes, using inexpensive Spanish labor, for a Lindencranes distributor in the U.S.

"That was my crime," Sagermark says. "Swedes living abroad or starting a business that favors another country are betraying their government."

Swedish officials, allegedly unhappy with Sagermark's plans to locate his business in Spain, demand he cancel the contract. When Sagermark refuses, the Swedish government allegedly tries to persuade him.

When Sagermark travels to New York to negotiate with Lindencranes' U.S. distributor, Swedish officials trick him into flying back to Sweden — a trick Sagermark considers kidnapping.

Once in Sweden, government officials allegedly take Sagermark to a small town called Vaesteras — where he is threatened, imprisoned and charged with undisclosed crimes in Spain. But when Spanish officials refuse to cooperate, Swedish officials free Sagermark, who returns to Spain.

More than a year later, Swedish officials allegedly violate international law by attempting to arrest Sagermark themselves, rather than dealing with Spanish authorities first.

In a wild international chase, Sagermark flees to Portugal, Israel, Greece and Italy, only to be apprehended by Swedish officials in a boat bound for Spain.

Taken back to Sweden, Sagermark is convicted of "disloyalty against the state." He appeals the decision all the way to Sweden's supreme court without success. But then he invokes the little-known, seldom-used law that allows a private citizen to charge government officials with wrongdoing.

"They'd throw out the charges but I'd just refile them," Sagermark says. "The more I tried to unravel their crimes, the more they covered them up and the more other people got involved."

"I raised hell with them for four years, but finally it had become so dangerous for me in Sweden, I had to flee to New York in 1974," he says.

Only six days after he arrived, Sweden abolished the law that allows top government officials to be prosecuted. Thus was born the "Anti-Sagermark Law" that protects more than 4,000 government officials.

When he entered the U.S., Sagermark did not ask for political asylum but instead received a temporary visa. He admits this may have been his biggest mistake. Now fighting deportation orders while seeking political asylum, Sagermark is even prevented from working.

Not being allowed to work is difficult, he says, for a man who holds a master's degree in civil engineering and once owned an established firm. He is a fiery man who dislikes idleness almost as much as the Swedish government.

To fight Sweden from abroad, Sagermark founded "The Swedish Citizens' Committee (in exile) for the Investigation of the Doings of the Parliamentary Ombudsman for Justice." The ombudsman is a symbol of Swedish justice — a symbol his story seems to tarnish.

Sagermark says he dreams of building this organization into such a political strength that one day he can return to his homeland and set right the wrongs he believes exist in his government.

SCE will help fund solar cell project

Production of low-cost photo-voltaic cells that convert sunlight into electricity has taken an important step forward in an agreement announced in Sacramento by California's two largest electric utilities.

Under the agreement, Southern California Edison Co. and Pacific Gas and Electric Co. will provide funding to support the operating costs for phased development of an automated solar cell production process. The cells, solar panels and pilot production line will be developed by Westinghouse Electric Corp.'s advanced energy systems division at Large, Pa.

The solar cell production agreement is the first of its kind financed entirely by private industry in conjunction with utilities.

Commenting on the agreement, F.A. McCrackin, director of research and development for Southern California Edison Company, said:

"We are encouraged by the progress in lower-cost photo-voltaic cells as a future means to harness solar energy — and particularly by the progress shown by Westinghouse.

"Edison hopes to use PV solar cells to their fullest economic potential at the earliest possible time, once they are proved feasible."

"While Edison continues to rely on development of coal and nuclear energy to lessen the present dependence on oil and natural gas, the company also is involved in a wide variety of alternate energy projects, including central station solar, wind, geothermal, coal gasification, fuel cells and studies for magnetohydrodynamics (MHD)."

The first phase of the PV cell program, a pilot facility with a 50-kilowatt per year capacity, will have operating costs of approximately $1 million in its first year of operation. The utilities' share of operating costs will be about $300,000 each.

Once the program's first phase is successfully completed, Westinghouse plans to scale up the operation in two steps. The first will be a semi-automated facility and the second a 25,000-kilowatt per year fully automated production line. The larger, automated facility will be the basic module for a full-scale production plant.

The utilities will receive their first cells under the agreement this year. They will use the solar cells in their on-going research and development programs.

Under a Department of Energy contract administered by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at Pasadena, Westinghouse's Research & Development Center developed the technology of growing single-crystal silicon ribbon and the subsequent processing into solar cells.

The ribbon, called dendritic web, is produced directly from molten silicon. The process yields a long, mirror-smooth, contamination-free ribbon ready for solar cell fabrication. Unlike other processes, costly ingot slicing, polishing and cleaning, with the attendant loss of expensive silicon, are eliminated.

Solar cells made from dendritic web have demonstrated conversion efficiency approaching 16 percent.

Attorney views courts as theater for her cases

By KAREN ALTMAN
Staff Writer

As a little girl, Gladys Towles Root couldn't decide whether to become an actress or a lawyer. So she became both.

And during the 52 years that she has practiced law, she's never showed up to work in a simple navy suit. She dresses for court as if it were the theater.

At 74, she figures she's the oldest practicing female attorney in California — if not anywhere. Her reputation as a flamboyant dresser has not faded with the years.

During the closing arguments recently in an Ontario courtroom, she sported a bright lime green velvet jumpsuit with an enormous collar, four-inch spike heels and a turquoise crucifix. A lime green hat lay nearby on a chair.

"I wear what I want," she said. "I haven't dressed for anyone other than Gladys Root and my clients any time in my life. I'm not concerned whether people like it or not."

She always asks her clients what their favorite colors are, then dresses accordingly. "I'm a great believer in color and the effect it has on my client having utmost confidence in me," she said.

Mrs. Root employs a full-time dressmaker, an 18-year-old she's sending through design school. She never wears anything "store bought" and disdains tailored clothes.

Her hair, dyed blond, is usually pulled back into a bun. When younger, she often dyed her hair to match her outfits, once even using fluorescent dye. She remembers the day she astounded passers by by walking two lambs — dyed to match her hair — on a leash down Wilshire Boulevard.

But it wasn't only clothes that distinguished Mrs. Root in her early years. She also was known for taking cases other lawyers wouldn't touch.

She's still handling complicated, tough cases, and came to Ontario to defend a prisoner accused of the brutal slaying of a fellow inmate. She lost the case after a five-week battle.

In 1928, the year she started her Los Angeles practice, female attorneys simply didn't handle rape, sodomy, molestation and homosexual cases. But Mrs. Root specialized in them.

Her first office was in the Bartlett Building on Seventh and Spring streets in Los Angeles, a scant four blocks from Skid Row. Her clientele was hardly upper-crust. Thieves, sex deviates, rapists and pickpockets found their way to her tiny office. Most had little, if any, money.

"If the body was warm, I said come in," she said. "They paid with cows, sick chickens, cars, sewing machines. Lots of times I didn't get paid at all."

"Get me Gladys!" became the rallying cry at Los Angeles County Jail in those early years as Mrs. Root's reputation grew. She defended every type of "morals charge" imaginable, winning more sex cases than any other lawyer in the United States.

Her father, a well-to-do businessman, had always dreamed of becoming a lawyer. He encouraged his bright, inquisitive daughter to fulfill that ambition.

When Gladys entered law school at the University of Southern California, there were three women in her class. She completed her studies in London and Paris.

Her first husband, Frank Root, was an advertising man. They divorced in 1941 after 11 years of marriage.

"Frank was uncomfortable with my lifestyle. He wanted to go on long vacations. I only go when it's business. Scenery I can live without," she said.

Two years after the divorce, she married John C. Geiger, who served as her business manager until his death from cancer in 1958.

Since the name "Root" was firmly established, she did not change it after her second marriage.

She has two children, a boy and a girl, and four grandchildren. She did not remarry after Geiger's death, but admits to having a steady stream of boyfriends.

Asked about her current men friends, she says demurely, "I have a lot of them." She prefers "gentlemen" — "someone who's polite, abides by custom, uses decent language and knows how to treat women."

Mrs. Root's workday often begins at 4:30 a.m. and doesn't end until midnight. She says she only requires three hours sleep per night. "I'm not a 9-to-5 person. It's hard to find people to work with because they can't keep up with me."

(A former law clerk — in his early 30s — said he "burned out" working with Mrs. Root. "She's terribly disorganized, stacks and stacks of files everywhere. Everything's at the last minute. Yet I learned an incredible amount from her. She's exciting, fascinating. I just OD'd.")

Today, Mrs. Root charges $150 per hour or $1,000 per day in court. She usually works with at least one other attorney, saying, "Two heads are better than one."

She lives in a 16-room house in Los Angeles' fashionable Hancock Park with four to six servants, including an upstairs and downstairs maid, cook, valet and chauffeur "most of the time." Her down-the-street neighbor is Mae West.

She doesn't drive. "The last time I drove (in the 1930s) my husband took my license away from me. I got three tickets in three months for going 105 mph."

Mrs. Root does not smoke or drink. She says she watches what she eats, although she has always liked chocolates.

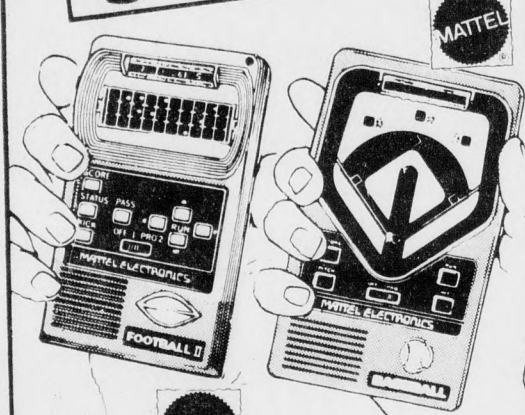

A family friend, Cy Rice, wrote two books about Mrs. Root: "Defender of the Damned" and "Get Me Gladys." She says CBS-TV is making a movie about her career. She's planning to appear in a couple scenes.

"I'm going to argue a case to the jury," she said, adding with a smile, "Maybe I'd better get a face lift first."

Not on don't list

'Super foods' that taste good

It seems that every time we turn around, another food goes on the "don't" list.

Refined sugar. Coffee. Meat. Butter. Eggs. Salt. Foods, drinks and seasonings that many enjoy, but can't have for various reasons.

There's one class of foods, however, that seems to have been left off the list. It's vegetables.

And now to recipes. Those specifying egg substitutes were tested using those products. If you're not on an egg - restricted diet, you may use the equivalent amount of eggs.

Stuffed Acorn Squash
2 large or 3 small acorn squash
2 tbsps. polyunsaturated margarine

1/2 cup chopped onion
1/2 cup chopped green pepper
5 slices whole wheat bread, cut into cubes
1/2 cup liquid egg substitute

1/2 cup shredded Mozarella cheese (made from skim milk)

Cut the squash in half and remove the seeds. Place the squash, cut side down, in a large baking dish. Add one-half inch of hot water and bake the squash at 400 degrees for 35 minutes, or until it is tender but not mushy.

Remove the squash from the baking dish and let it cool.

Melt the margarine in a skillet. Add the onion and green pepper and cook until they are almost tender. Remove the skillet from the heat.

Scoop the pulp from the squash, leaving a one-fourth inch shell. Chop the pulp, the mix it with the bread cubes and the egg substitute. Blend the squash mixture into the onions and peppers in the skillet.

Mound the mixture into the squash shells. Sprinkle the tops with the Mozarella. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes, or until the cheese is slightly browned. Serves six.

Nutty Vegetable Pate
1/2 cup egg substitute
1/2 cup walnuts

1 pkg (9 ozs.) frozen cut green beans, cooked, or equivalent fresh

2 tbsps. sherry
3 tbsps. polyunsaturated margarine

1/4 cup finely chopped onion

Few grains freshly ground pepper

Freshly grated nutmeg
Pour the egg substitute into a six - inch skillet or saucepan with a non-stick surface. Cook the eggs, tightly covered, over low heat until they are firm to the touch (about 10 minutes). Allow the eggs to cool, then chop them, reserving one tablespoon for garnish.

Roast the walnuts in a shallow pan at 300 degrees for 20 minutes, or until they are lightly browned, stirring them once during the cooking. Set them aside to cool. Finely chop the walnuts in a blender or food processor.

In a clean container, finely chop the green beans and Sherry, chopping them in two batches if necessary. Melt the margarine in a large skillet over medium heat. Add the onion and saute until it is tender. Remove the pan from the heat and stir in the chopped egg substitute, beans, chopped nuts, pepper and nutmeg. Place the mixture in a serving bowl, cover and refrigerate for several hours.

Garnish this pate with the reserved chopped egg substitute. Serve it as a sandwich spread or a dip for fresh vegetables and crackers.

Brown Rice Cheese Bake
2 tbsps. margarine
1/2 cup chopped onion
1/2 cup chopped green pepper

2 tbsps. flour
1 cup skim milk
1/4 cup uncooked brown rice

Water
1 cup low-fat cottage cheese
1/2 cup egg substitute

1 can (4 ozs.) sliced mushrooms, drained

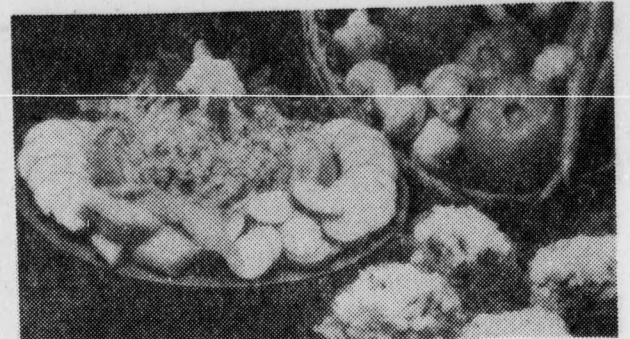

Melt the margarine in a saucepan over medium heat. Add the onion and green pepper, cooking until they are tender. Stir in the flour to make a smooth mixture. Gradually stir in the milk. Cook the mixture over medium heat, stirring it constantly, until it is thickened.

Cook the rice in water according to package directions, but for half the recommended cooking time. Drain the rice well. Combine the rice, cottage cheese, egg substitute, mushrooms, and the cooked onion and pepper sauce. Pour the mixture into a one-quart baking dish.

Place the dish in a shallow baking pan and pour boiling water into the pan to a depth of one inch.

Bake at 350 degrees for 70 minutes or until a knife inserted in the center comes out clean.

Good for you are nutty vegetable plates, acorn squash and cornmeal dumplings atop a vegetable stew. These good foods are not on the "don't list," so enjoy, enjoy.

Where do eggs belong?

If you were to analyze your family's daily meals to make sure they were balanced nutritionally, in which food group would you classify eggs? What about beans or peanut butter?

These foods fall somewhere within the four food groups recognized by the U.S. Department of Agriculture: milk, meat, vegetables and fruits, and breads and cereals. But where?

"It may seem strange at first, but all three of these foods fit in the meat group," says the executive secretary of the California Dietetic Association, Doris Derelian. They are organized in the same group because they are primary sources of protein, she says, explaining that the system groups foods by the major nutrients they contribute.

"The milk group supplies calcium, the vegetables and fruits provide vitamins A and C, and the breads and cereals group contributes a combination of thiamin, niacin, fiber and iron," she says.

As a registered dietitian, Derelian is familiar with the history of food grouping which, she says, dates back to the 1920's when nutritionists and other health-oriented professionals first tried to upgrade people's diets, and thus their health, by grouping foods. "There have been many variations on the food grouping theme but the widespread use of the four food group system began in the mid-1950's when the U.S. Department of Agriculture developed it as an evaluation tool for the general public."

The USDA reasoned that the four food groups would serve as a dietary salvation. "When the minimum number of servings for each group are consumed daily, most of the recommended dietary allowances for specific nutrients are met," Derelian says. "The remainder is easily taken care of by the additional foods that people eat each day."

Miracle behind 'family of milks'

Try bubbly for sherbet

Versatile dairy foods — so essential to the human diet they make up one of the four basic food groups — are freshly abundant in California yet few people understand the real miracle behind the "family of milks."

Dairying is the largest division of California's oldest and largest industry, agriculture. Original dairy farmers were Spanish priests who provided milk to handfuls of starving settlers and Indians.

Today, dairymen are specialists involved in a multi-billion dollar industry. More efficient and productive than any other milk producers in the nation, California dairymen are ecologists reaping the benefits of our natural resources, the greatest of which is solar energy.

Dairy cows turn tremendous amounts of solar energy, stored in the tissues of plants, into milk, a food item readily available for human consumption.

Energy from the sun is captured by green plants that fill the hillsides and spring up from farmlands across the golden state. Only a small portion of these plants are grown for human consumption. Grasses and forage, for example, are easily grown and do well on marginal soil, yet they are too high in fibrous material, such as cellulose, for people to digest. Alfalfa, feed corn, and other crops, combined with pastureland, are only usable through livestock.

It takes several years for a beef cow to turn forages into edible meat. But the dairy cow can turn hay and grain into palatable and nutritious milk in a matter of hours.

Milk is the end result of a finely tuned series of biological functions. All take place within the dairy cow, nature's more perfect food refinery.

The modern dairy cow is a clean, sturdy animal that is angular in appearance. Its purpose is to produce milk not meat; the dairy cow's structure lets it perform with efficiency that surpasses any productive facility ever conceived by man.

After the bacteria break down the complex food molecules are absorbed, along with water and other minerals, by three remaining stomachs. The dairy cow uses only the nutrients it needs to maintain its metabolism and the rest are filtered out and stored by the udder in the form of milk. Some cows give over 30,000 pounds of milk in a year and West Coast dairymen produce more milk per cow than any other producers in the nation — over 14,000 pounds average form approximately one million animals.

Milk is a major source of calcium and riboflavin. It

Barbecue beef tips

Korean-style barbecued beef steaks get their exquisite flavor from an unusual sesame seed marinade. Cut 1-1/2 pounds boneless beef round, sirloin tip or chuck steak into 4 or 5 steaks. Marinate at least 4 to 6 hours in a mixture of 1/3 cup soy sauce, 1/3 cup oil, 1/4 cup each minced green onion and sugar, 2 tablespoons toasted sesame seeds, 3 cloves minced garlic, 1/2 teaspoon salt and dash bottled hot pepper sauce. Remove from marinade and place on grill about 3 inches above hot coals; barbecue 5 to 6 minutes per side for rare or to desired degree of doneness. Makes 4 servings also provides many other minerals, vitamins, and essential amino acids for building proteins.

Although nutrients are readily available in wholesome, fresh whole milk, they are also available from any one of the rich dairy foods comprising the family of milks.

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Champagne has its good and bad years like any other wine, I was reminded recently over a friendly goblet of bubbly with Pierre Lanson, whose family has been producing the sparkling wine in France for a good many years.

"As a matter of fact, 1973 proved to be such a poor year that we did not produce any," Lanson recalled, "but 1979 turned out to be very good, so Americans can look forward to excellent champagne for some time."

The price of champagne has been going up like everything else these days, but that doesn't seem to have deterred American consumers, who quaffed 8 million bottles of the French product last year alone.

Lanson learned the basics about making sparkling wines not in his native France where the family vineyards are, but in Germany where he spent two years studying the principles of oenology.

Lanson is something of a purist when it comes to champagne, as many producers are, and he shies away from the idea of using it in cooking.

"It is too good for such uses," he said. "I believe champagne should be drunk as an aperitif or with the meal but not mixed with other things."

With one exception, he adds. Champagne makes a delicious sherbet. The champagne is not cooked, incidentally, but retains its natural flavor.

Iced desserts have a romance all their own. They are believed to have originated in China and to have traveled to Persia and they were a feature of the lavish Roman feasts.

Years later, the Italians elevated iced desserts to a perfection that impressed the rest of Europe. When Catherine de Medici went to France in 1533 to marry Henry II, she put ices on the menu of the French court. These were not ice creams, but fruit-flavored ices or sherbets. Sherbet, or sorbet as the French call it, is a favorite in that country. The classic sorbet is usually made from fruit juices with liqueurs or wines.

Here is the recipe for champagne sherbet.

1 cup sugar
1/4 cup water
1 cup orange juice
1/2 cup lemon juice
16 ounces champagne

boil the water and sugar for five minutes, cool the syrup and blend with the orange juice, lemon juice and champagne. Freeze the mixture in ice trays. Serves 6.

Says education, spending lid needed

Prop. 11 author envisions turnabout

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

Bill Press, author of the unsuccessful Proposition 11 on the June ballot, can foresee the day another oil surtax initiative could win Californians' approval.

But he said public education and spending limits for initiative campaigns are needed before a new proposition is tested at the polls.

Press, 40, but looking years younger, has led a life taking him from Catholic seminarian to leader of a conservation organization, high-ranking appointee in the administration of Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. and, most recently, prime mover in the initiative campaign.

On Monday night, he came to Chino to catch up with a project, the Chino Hills specific plan, near to his heart from his days as director of the state Office of Planning and Research.

"While (Supervisor) Bob Townsend is the father of this specific plan, I think I'm the stepfather. I have a very personal interest in seeing it succeed," Press commented.

After a consultant and the Chino Hills Citizens Advisory Committee reviewed planning concepts for shaping the future of some 18,000 acres, Press said, "I was impressed."

He added, "This is not happening anywhere else in the state — and I know that for a fact — where you have this large of an area that is being planned at one time and where you have the property owners and the citizens and the county all involved in the process.

"I find it very exciting. It's really a model ... for the state and the rest of the nation."

Press — a loyal Brown supporter who joined the governor's presidential campaign in New Hampshire and Maine — left his administrative post last year to push for passage of Proposition 11.

The initiative would have raised some $200 million annually — some said as much as $420 million — by placing a 10 percent surtax on the California profits of energy companies. Revenues would have been used to improve public transportation and develop alternative fuels.

Counting in large part on voter anger over rising oil profits, long gas lines and skyrocketing gas prices, Press in a March interview called the central issue "corporate greed."

Typical of complicated state initiatives, Proposition 11 produced wide disagreement over its effects. It lost with 56 percent of the vote going against it.

Asked about a new proposition, Press said, "It's really too soon. We're still experiencing the fallout of Proposition 11, and we still have a (campaign) deficit to repay."

"I'm more than ever convinced because of Proposition 11 that private industry, particularly oil companies, should contribute to big, comfortable transit in the state.

And I think that two years from now a renewed Prop 11 might very well succeed."

Press said public education is needed about the operations of major oil companies and the "whole global energy picture."

He added he is unsure yet what form this education should take, although he and others are exploring the possibility of buying weekly space in major newspapers for an energy column and trying for free television time to "refute the image-advertising concept of the oil companies."

Press conceded that the free time would take a new application of the fairness doctrine by the Federal Communications Commission.

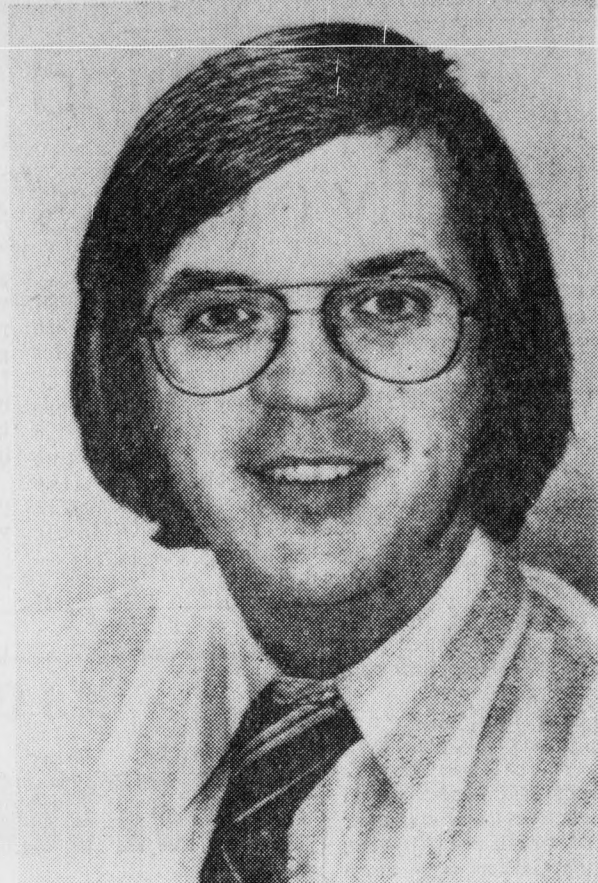

His campaign vastly outspent by oil companies opposing Proposition 11, Press said, "I'm convinced that the first item on the agenda has to be some very strong limits for spending in initiative campaigns."

"It's just so easy for major corporations to buy an election in the states."

Despite the disappointment of defeat, Press called the initiative the "best thing I ever did."

It was a great growth experience The fact is that 2.7 million people voted for more mass transit paid for in part by the oil companies."

Today, Press jokingly calls himself the "ultimate commuter — living in Marin County and working in Southern California."

Rep. Lloyd and Sen. Cranston disagree on Baldy wilderness

Whether a portion of Mount Baldy should be designated as wilderness or become an expanded downhill skiing area has sparked a controversy between a congressman and senator.

Rep. Jim Lloyd, D-35th District, has made a proposal designed to protect the 150 to 200 bighorn sheep that roam the Mount Baldy area while operators of the Mount Baldy Ski Lift want to expand their downhill ski runs on the northeast face of the peak.

Meanwhile, Sen. Alan Cranston, Democrat, has introduced a wilderness bill of his own that excludes approximately 1,000 acres where ski operators want to build a run for 6,000 to 7,000 skiers daily.

Lloyd's plan is part of a consensus California wilderness bill that has been worked out by California congressmen. The proposal is expected to get approval from the House Interior Committee this week and then go before the full House for a vote later this year.

Lloyd and members of the Sierra Club argue that the proposal to expand skiing threatens the grazing and lambing area of the bighorn sheep.

They also claim that the ski lift operators aren't financially able to expand, there isn't adequate predictable snowfall and the terrain in the proposed expansion area is too rugged.

But, representatives of the ski lift contend they are serious about going through with a multi-million dollar expansion of their operation.

The expansion area contains snowfall and terrain comparable to that of Vail, Colo., they say.

Their plans call for construction of a lodge, a 2,000 car parking facility, six or seven chairlifts and a gondola.

Lloyd originally proposed a 45,000 acre wilderness area in the Mount Baldy area, to be known as the Sheep Mountain Wilderness. The proposal was later downscaled to 44,600 acres after some modifications by the subcommittee.

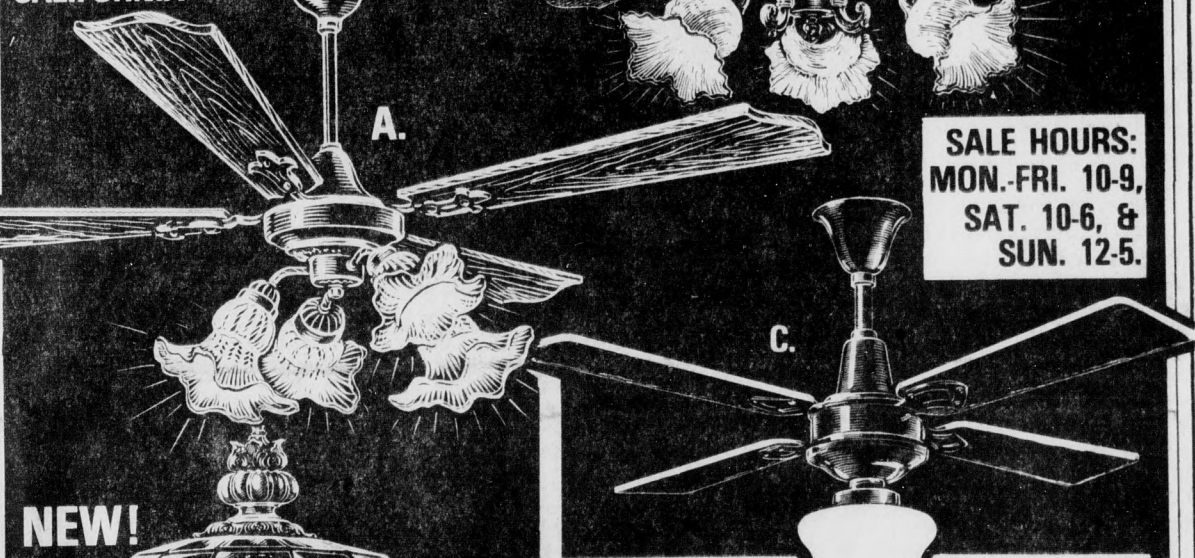

Lloyd's proposal followed the U.S. Forest Service's roadless area evaluation (RARE II) which recommended that 30,400 acres in the Baldy area — not including the ski expansion — be preserved.

Let's Talk

Life is very similar to a decathlon

By REV. W. LEE TRUMAN
Copley News Service

A chance remark had more truth than the teen-age speaker realized. He commented in a counseling session that life is like an Olympic decathlon event.

The decathlon is a competitive match in 10 different track and field events. The winner is the person who is trained well enough and so well rounded in that training that he or she can show success in many demanding tests of athletic competition. He or she is not a one-event person with a smashing or spectacular win here and there, but competitive and trained in a number of skills.

The decathlon requires a balance and blend of physical talent. It does not allow for overdevelopment or exclusive, specialized training. The huge bull - shouldered shot putter is not able to do well in the high - jump or pole - vault. The thin, lean distance - runner has trouble throwing with force the javelin nor can he build up enough force to hurl the discus or hammer well.

The decathlon champion must be good at everything without the specialization which warps physical development. He or she must be able to be a winner on the broad front of many demanding skills, each requiring a different form of agility, strength and dedication.

It is no different from what life asks of us when we think about success. The restless driving ambition of a gifted executive is what moves him to the top of his field. The executive becomes the undisputed master of the deal, and knows how to manipulate business and property. But if that success is obtained at the price of failing in other areas of his life, he has only one win in the decathlon of living, and he loses the game because he does so poorly in the other events of living life that demand equal skill. What I am saying is that all of the business success in the world becomes bitter laurels in the face of domestic tragedy, ill-health or the basic loss of direction in life.

It is the responsible balance in living which makes a winner, and not the lopsided success in one area, ignoring the failure in all of the other events of life. You should draw up your own list of items you feel you face in this dailyness of living and which for you make a meaningful life. No one else can write your list for you. If you do measure yourself by one or two items in which you feel very secure, read the following list ... a list by which I try to measure myself, and see if you would be a winner if this were the decathlon event of life. But remember, a spectacular success in one or two does not win the laurels of a winner.

1. Creative and useful work, a job you enjoy doing and contributes to all a little better life because you do your job well.
2. A marriage and a home where laughter and love are in abundance ... a place you and others enjoy being.
3. Money enough to allow freedom of choice in the direction of life's total events with your basic needs met.
4. Children, if wanted, and of whom you can be proud, yet persons in their own right and not the manipulated extension of your own personality

Age does not take away the good in life

By REV. KENNETH R. T. GORDON
Montclair Ministerial Association

While in a store this past week, several youngsters were making some rather unkind remarks with reference to certain "dumb old people." The same day I read an article by Robert Foster in "The Challenge," in which he called attention to one of the most moving incidents in the Bible that concerned a man 85 years young, Caleb by name. Foster noted that many would have thought of Caleb as a prime candidate for the executive director of the Israelites Association of Retired Persons!

When many folk are too tired to care, let alone "do," Caleb was buoyant, vigorous and looking forward to some more of this world to conquer. At 40 he had been a warrior, a man of vision and action with a keen sense of anticipation concerning the future. At 85 his appetite for the impossible was still as strong as ever.

If you were to read the story of the nation of Israel's journey from Egypt to Canaan land from Scripture, you will find in Numbers 13, the account of how a family of "giants" in the land so frightened the people, they refused to enter the Promised Land at the point where God had chosen. Instead of confronting those large and powerful people in the presence and by power of God, they chose to wander in the desert for an unnecessary 38 years. During this time all the frightened, faithless people died, except two, one of whom was Caleb. Now, some 45 years later, finally in the Land of Promise, 85-year-old Caleb said: "Let me and my family be given that mountain for our inheritance," the very stronghold in the Hebron mountains that so frightened the people years before. And with utter confidence in the God he had trusted without measure for all the years, Caleb led his sons in conquest of the giants and their seemingly invincible stronghold! He could have settled for a lesser inheritance at an easier cost and struggle. But Caleb was not content with the average, even at 85. He was not willing to settle for anything except, "By God's help, 'I Will!'"

Today, anyone over 55 or so is often labeled an "old fogie." But, William James, the famous psychologist, is quoted as saying that most people are "old fogies" at 25! The reason is that the average person has by then already given up most of the fight for the right, is satisfied with the status quo, has closed the mind to new ideas, and is fearful of new adventures, and is content merely to abide the time in the monotony of dreary assumptions that nothing can ever be changed. And may I add, without knowing that there is a God alive and waiting for them to be willing to become a part of His plan of blessing in the world.

From this incident, we prayerfully can learn that many of the best of life's blessings take time and persistence to realize and thus can come only to those who are willing to invest years in faith in God and His promises. Caleb was not the only character, Biblical or otherwise, to prove that life does not have to become dull or stale with age. One writer accurately contends that "growing old" is an erroneous statement. If you are still growing, you are not really old.

Robert Foster's prayer seems appropriate for us to offer to the Lord often: "Lord, give me the courage to face the difficult; help me to be a person to match the mountains; grant me the faith and knowledge of your ways so that I might know how to draw on Your resources and to do so in a way that the world will know You are GOD!" AMEN, INDEED.
